WATER DISTRICT PIPELINE RAISES OUTLYING WELLS

25,000,000 Gallons Per Day Being Poured Into Gravels

Success in their attempt to raise well levels west of the Niles-Irvington fault line, is seen by the directors of the Alameda County Water District, following a special meeting held this week, at which the new installation of the large pipe, from the old Spring Valley main to the creek channel, was discussed.

The thirty-inch pipe, delivering water into the western gravels at the rate of 25,000,000 gallons per day, was put into operation last week, after a series of tests were conducted and minor leaks repaired. That the water level will be appreciably raised is noted in the rise of one well near the gravel pit hole on the old Overacker place. The well in question has shown a raise of over six inches, though the pipe had been in operation only a few days.

The water being taken through the new pipe is part of that being loaned by the city of San Francisco. In spite of the fact that a large portion is being taken from the creek bed, to pass through the pipe over the fault, the stream in the main channel, flowing under the highway bridge east of Niles, is the largest since the construction of the Calaveras

SECOND ANNUAL FAIR BEGINS TONIGHT

HUNDREDS AT JUNIOR C. OF C. PICNIC AND BARBECUE SUNDAY

All-Day Event Featured By Excellence Of Both Lunch And Dinner

Al Juhl's Cobble Crest Park, in the hills near Brightside, Niles canyon, was the scene Sunday of the first huge picnic and barbecue to be given by the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce. The all-day affair, featured by dancing and the serving of both lunch and dinner, broke up at 10 p. m. Sunday night.

Representations from other east bay Junior Chambers attended, led by J. J. Amaral, of Pleasanton, county president, who was the only speaker of the day.

Leading off with entertainment and games, the picnic got under way at 11 a. m., the crowd gradually increasing until late in the afternoon, which was featured by a baseball game, and a tug-of-war. The latter event, between an augmented board of directors and another group of juniors, was won by the former in three minutes and eighteen seconds. Those on the victorious team will be treated to dinner by the losers at the next regular meeting of the organization.

Music during the day was furnished by the Oklahoma Ramblers and by Frank Lewis' orchestra.

Prepared by Art Roderick, with the assistance of Henry Rego, James Delury, Tony Silva and a number of others, the lunch and dinner caused comment by their excellence. The barbecued steaks, old hands said, were the best ever tasted in this section.

Due to careful watching by committeemen, the day passed without disturbance or accident of any kind. President Sam Kerns stated his entire satisfaction with the event.

During the afternoon, specialty musical numbers were rendered by little Albert Silva, accordianist, and by the Misses Jacqueline Lewis and Knudson, both under six years of age.

DOG HERO WILL GET MEDAL AT TOWNSHIP FAIR

The heroism of a dog, who saved his master from death under the hoofs and horns of an enraged bull last year, will be rewarded Saturday afternoon at ceremonies to be conducted by the Latham Foundation, at the Washington Township Fair.

The dog, a medium-sized fellow, will be given the Foundation medal for heroic service, for saving his master, John Dos Santos, of Centerville, when the man was knocked down and about to be gored by a bull. The faithful dog, realizing his master's peril, seized the bull by the leg, and diverted its attention sufficiently for Dos Santos to scramble to safety.

The medal will be presented, with due ceremony, by Herbert H. Hallett, a member of the Latham Foundation.

Mrs. C. N. Myrick, and her son, Charles, will leave soon on a trip to Rochester, New York, where Mrs. Myrick will visit with her father.

APRICOT DRYING OPERATIONS GET UNDER WAY HERE

All Growers Equipped To Dry Prefer Task To Low Canning Price

Apricot drying operations are getting under way in Washington township this week, with nearly all growers equipped to do so, planning on drying their crops. Low offers by canneries, in spite of a short canning crop and a clean market, have forced the orchardists to handle their own fruit, it is pointed out.

Although the Santa Clara valley growers have stipulated a price of $75 to $100 per ton for their canning grades, offers this week have been far below that figure, growers here have stated, It is pointed out that the June dropping, heavy in some local orchards, will even further reduce the better grades, possibly to a tonnage lower than that of 1934. R. H. Brotherton, member of the state-wide growers committee, stated Sunday that the canning price will be higher in Santa Clara valley than elsewhere because of the fact that the best canning qualities are found here.

While it is estimated that the state crop will be some 20,000 tons larger than last year's, there is considerable "dirty" fruit. Packers estimate that of the 180,000 tons of apricots expected, only about 45,000 tons will be used.

With England in a better position than ever to buy the canned apricots, and Germany, heavy dried 'cot buyer, in an almost bankrupt condition, growers who sell their fruit at a good price for canning, should do well this time.

Centerville In Gala Dress For Lions Club Second Spectacular Fete

TO CELEBRATE FOURTH

Queen Mabel's Coronation Will Be Feature At Grand Ball

Housed in its huge tent, with additional attractions planned for the five days, the Second Annual Washington Fair and July Fourth Celebration will get under way at the Washington Union High school grounds, Centerville, tonight.

The display tent, housing all exhibits, will open at 7:30 p. m. Exhibitors are hurrying today, with final touches on their booths. Canned goods, dairy products, stoves, electrical appliances, building materials, vegetables, flowers, tile, furniture, foods, farm implements, automobiles, hardware, stock and poultry are only a few of the myriad of items to fix the interest of the fair-goer this time. Booths by civic organizations, depicting the growth and importance of Washington township towns will be part of the show.

The main feature of the evening's program, however, will be the huge coronation ball, to begin at 9 p. m., to the music of an augmented Sunny Californians' orchestra. The coronation of Queen-Elect Mabel Lewis, by Superior Judge Frank M. Ogden, will take place at 10 p. m., after which the grand march, in which presidents of sponsoring bodies and maids, as well as other officials, will participate, will be the high point of the night. The maids, who will attend Queen Mabel are: Florence Martinelli, of Niles; Vivian Luna, Decoto; Eleanor Silva, Newark; Irene Frates, Alvarado; Mildred Santos, Mission San Jose and Evelyn Bettencourt, Irvington.

Beginning with the great patriotic parade at 10 a. m., the July Fourth program will be the most

DECOTO MAN HELD AFTER ATTEMPT TO DERAIL FAST TRAIN SATURDAY MORNING

FORD AGENCY AT CENTERVILLE CHANGES HANDS

Furtado and Bettencourt Take Over Dohner and Galbraith Business

One of Washington township's thriving businesses opened under new management Monday, after the sale last week of the southern Alameda county Ford agency and garage, formerly run by Dohner and Galbraith, Hayward firm, to W. J. Furtado and M. S. Bettencourt, well-known Centerville men.

Established in 1927, in a building specially constructed by Furtado and Bettencourt, the Dohner and Galbraith agency has been in continuous operation at Centerville. D. Galbraith one of the heads of the auto firm, stated his conviction Tuesday, that the new management would retain old friends of the agency and acquire new ones as time passed. W. J. Furtado, Sr., who will take over the duties of manager, echoed Galbraith's assertion that the quality of service will be maintained.

Renovations in the building, to be known henceforth under the firm name of Furtado and Bettencourt, were started Monday. The interior, both display and mechanical sections, will be repainted and brightened. Furtado stated that new equipment will be installed, including a laboratory tester, new paint room and wash rack, and a number of other items to bring the shop stricty up-to-date. He declared that the renovations will in no way interfere with the functioning of the shop, and that he expects to have the new work completed within two week time.

The entire mechanical, office and sales staffs will be retained, Furtado, said, with the exception of Jack Long, manager, who will continue as a member of the Dohner and Galbraith organization. Long, who has taken a keen interest in civic work at Centerville, has made a host of friends in Washington township.

Always a leader in the automobile field in this end of Alameda county, the Centenville agency, under the direction of Furtado and Bettencourt should establish a record in sales, in addition to building up the popularity, so well founded by Dohner and Galbraith.

Vengeance For Father's Death In 1925 Said Motive For Act

A desire to avenge his father's death, which occurred in a railroad accident here ten years ago, is said to have led Jesus Guiteriz, 40, of Decoto, to attempt to wreck a Southern Pacific passenger train near Decoto at about 5:45 Saturday morning. Guiteriz had allegedly broken a switch near the scene of the fatal accident ten years ago.

Held in the county jail on an open charge pending investigation by police, Guiteriz told Deputy District Attorney Warren Olney, that he had "waited ten years to get even" with the engineer of the engine which killed his father on December 20, 1925. He stated that he thought the engineer of the same engine was in the cab of the engine Saturday The death of his friend, Anthony Goulart, of Decoto, who was killed by the Stockton Flyer at Decoto last Wednesday, brought the 1925 accident vividly to his mind, Guiteriz told Olney. He planned the wreck after Goulart's death, he said.

The San Jose-San Francisco train, No. 251, which passes through Niles at 5:45 a. m., is usually filled with early commuters. Numerous lives would have been jeopardized had the train plunged from the tracks.

The wreck was averted when Engineer H. L. Hand and Fireman John Cooper noticed that the track signals were not functioning, and stopped the train. Neither Hand nor Johnson were members of the train crew which ran down the section hand's motor car on which the elder Guiteriz was riding in 1925. They were not in the cab of the engine which killed Goulart last Wednesday.

The elder Guiteriz was one of four railroad laborers killed in an accident north of Niles on December 20, 1925. The men were proceeding to work from Decoto to a section of track east of Niles, when a switch locomotive bore down on them from around a curve. Several of the workers jumped from the rapidly moving car, but three of them, including Guiteriz, were instantly killed.

Guiteriz, who told police that he attempted to open the switch while he was intoxicated, and brooding over the death of his father and Goularte, dropped his wrench when the opening of the switch caused the signals to change color and started the warning bell at the crossing. Guiteriz' wrench, painted red, was found later at the switch, and led to his apprehension.

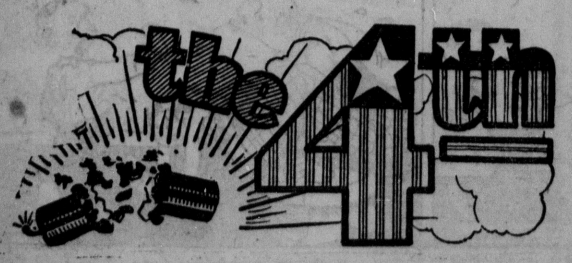
Pull the Eagle's Tail

The American people have good reason to get out tomorrow morning and pull the eagle's tail in a noisy celebration of the one hundred and fifty-ninth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Fourth of July this year should be somewhat on the order of a fete for the return of the prodigal son. For the past three years it has been a serious question whether the next year would find any valid excuse for celebrating a day made but a mockery by the subtle establishment of a fascist government upon the ruins of our democracy.

But the spectre of absolutism in this country has passed. The fear of a dictatorship has gone. The supreme court a few weeks ago drove the last nail in the coffin of the damnable theory that here in America was breathing room for a hated Mussolini, a swaggering Hitler, on a profane Stalin.

The skies have cleared. Our forefathers builded better than they may well have thought. The Republic lives. It endures. It still holds the torch of human liberty high in the Western heavens. It serves notice on unscrupulous and cunning men, who, capitalizing on economic woe and political bewilderment, sought to turn the wheels of progress backward by centuries, that they cannot strut here as dictators, to make of men born free, political slaves—served notice that cannot be misunderstood that this type of governmental retrogression cannot live in the Western World.

It's glorious to be an American! And America's greatest day is the Fourth of July. Pull the Eagle's tail. Make a noise. And thank God you are still a free man—AND LIVE UNDER THE STARS AND STRIPES!



FALL FROM AUTO IS FATAL TO HAYWARD MAN SATURDAY

Participation of the Hayward Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, in the Hayward Rodeo Saturday, was dampened by the tragic death of Robert C. Akin, prominent in the post and in the American Legion, for several years, when he fell from the post "official car," driven by Frank Thomas, well-known Decoto man, while en route to the rodeo grounds.

Akin was almost instantly killed, when he tumbled from the grotesque vehicle rounding the turn onto the Castro Valley boulevard from the Dublin road. He was riding in the machine with Thomas, Ben Shaw, Charles Sorensen and Jack Snyder, none of whom could account for his falling, it is said. Akin, who was rushed to the Hayward hospital by Henry Faria, was dead on his arrival there.

Akin was a native of Mount Carmel, Illinois, and was forty-eight years of age. He had lived in California for about eleven years. His wife, Mrs. Odyssa Akin, president of the Hayward unit, Veterans of Foreign Wars auxiliary, survives.

The funeral, with full miltary honors, was held from the Pratt mortuary Tuesday, after the body had lain in state at the Memorial building during the morning. Burial was in the veterans' plot at the Lone Hill cemetery.

JULY 12 DATE FOR NEXT PNONE RATE GROUP MEETING

July 12 is the date set for the next meeting of the Washington township telephone rate revision group, originated by the Decoto civic groups, it was decided last Friday night when representatives of district organizations met to discuss final plans for their campaign. Representatives of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company will be asked to meet with the organization next time.

The object of the campaign under way, is the elimination of the five-cent toll now in effect between Washington township towns. Frank Thomas was recently named Chairman, and Roland Bendel, secretary.

FLAME OF THE BORDER

By VINGIE E. ROE....

COPYRIGHT DOUBLEDAY, DORAN & Co. Inc. W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY

CHAPTER I.—Seeking death by throwing herself from the summit of Lone Mesa, to escape dishonor, at the hands of a drunken desperado, Sonya Savarin allows herself to be rescued by her suddenly sobered and repentant attacker. The girl is a self-appointed physician to the Navajo Indians, living on an Arizona sheep ranch with her brother Serge, his wife, Lila, and their small daughter, Babs. For a year she has been engaged to Rodney Blake, wealthy New Yorker, but her heart is with the friendless Navajos and she evades a wedding.

CHAPTER II.—Sonya pulls Little Moon, wife of Two Fingers, a Navajo, through the crisis of an illness. Two Fingers is deeply grateful.

CHAPTER III.—In the desert village, shopping, Sonya again meets the man whose advances she had repulsed on Lone Mesa. He tells her he bitterly regrets his action and has never had a minute's peace since that day. Sonya is affected, but unforgiving. She hears rumors of a Border bandit "El Capitan Diablo," who crucifies his "double-crossers" and has a dire reputation as a despoiler and murderer, vaguely connecting him with her attacker.

CHAPTER IV.—Sonya pays a visit to Little Moon and finds her well on her way to recovery. On her return she rides to the top of Lone Mesa. There she again comes upon the strange young man, but she no longer fears him. When he reiterates his sorrow over his misconduct she indicates forgiveness and assures him a man can always change for the better.

CHAPTER V.—Befriending the wife of Hosteen Nez, a Navajo, she adds him to her circle of devoted friends. At a neighborhood dance she meets the mysterious stranger of the Mesa and demands that he tell her his name. Finally he confides to her that his right name is Starr Stone, that his mother believes him dead, and that he goes by a different name in this region. He departs with a tall, fierce Mexican, with whom he is mysteriously associated.

CHAPTER VI.—Sonya, with a feeling of shame, realizes she is falling in love with a man whom she can only class as a renegade and outlaw, knowing that under the circumstances she can never marry Blake. From an odd character of the desert, known as the "Servant of the Lord," Sonya learns Stone is alive and safe.

CHAPTER VII.—An influenza epidemic among the Indians keeps Sonya busy for many days. Stone greatly helps her in her care for the stricken Navajos. Sonya and Stone declare their love for each other, all doubt in the mind of the girl being ended.

CHAPTER X.—Sonya realizes she is in the power of El Capitan Diablo. In his stronghold she is committed to the care of an elderly Spanish woman, to await the arrival of the chief. A younger woman, Concha, views with apprehension the arrival of Stone, whom she loves, evidently a prisoner, with El Capitan Diablo.

CHAPTER XI.—At the Savarin ranch there is dire consternation over the disappearance of Sonya. Searching parties, working diligently, are unable to find any trace of the girl. Her horse, arriving home riderless, is the first indication of harm having come to her. With Serge, Marston visits the village store, the last place where Sonya is known to have been, but finds no clues. Her Navajo friends, remembering all they owe Sonya, take the trail, finding evidence of the presence of an airship where Sonya might presumably have been seized.

CHAPTER XII.—Sonya bravely faces the bandit chief as he questions her concerning her knowledge of his opium smuggling activities. Stone, who had not known of Sonya's kidnaping, is brought before her. Diablo accuses him of "double-crossing," and denial is futile. Firm in their mutual love the pair listen to the pronouncement of their doom, Stone to a lingering death and Sonya to be the plaything of Manuel, Diablo's favorite lieutenant. The girl is recommitted to the care of the Spanish woman who has been her jailer.

CHAPTER XIII.—Sonya's plea to her keeper for a means of escape from the horror awaiting her, by self-destruction, is unavailing, but Concha, her love for Stone overcoming her hatred for her successful rival, which she knows Sonya to be, arranges for the escape of the pair. They flee the camp in an airplane, but as they leave they realize that Concha has paid, with her life, for their chance of escape.

CHAPTER XIV.—With Diablo and Manuel in close pursuit, the pair fly in the direction of the girl's home. Stone, unarmed, realizes that capture means a cruel death for both of them, but is helpless. Approaching Lone Mesa, he determines to attempt a landing on its summit. He succeeds, but Diablo and Manuel also land. Resigned to their fate, Stone and Sonya are rescued by the girl's devoted Navajos, whom she has so greatly befriended. Infuriated over the situation in which they find the girl, the Indians hurl both Diablo and Manuel to their deaths from Lone Mesa's height. Following the killings, but not seeing them, Serge Savarin, with Rodney Blake and Marston, arrive. Sonya shields her Navajo friends, allowing her brother and his companions to believe that Diablo's plane had crashed. Blake claims Sonya, but Stone, armed with a revolver he had taken from El Diablo, controls the situation. Savarin and his two friends being unarmed. Boldly declaring her right to select her life mate, Sonya chooses Starr Stone, rejecting Rodney Blake. The "Servant of the Lord," who apparently is at home on the mesa, reads the wedding service, and Stone and Sonya leave in the airplane, to face life together in a "new world."

And, bending his tall head, he kissed her on the lips.

"Ready," he said, and, pushing the girl beyond the plane's wing tip, he caught the propeller's blade.

Up and down he swung it—one, two, three, then a fourth vehement time, and came lithely up and over into the pilot's seat as the roar of the catching engine thundered into the night.

And Sonya Savarin, looking down with wide drawn eyes, had seen, just as they surged for the start, a long red spurt of flame where Concha stood in the shadows, heard, above the roar of the motor, the faint, sharp crack of a shot.

"Oh, God!" she cried, a sob in her throat. "Oh, God! Conchita!"

Conchita, who, saving her lover yet could not save him apart from his, had made the last great sacrifice for love itself.

The pouring crowd that flowed along the field, lighted now, could wreak no vengeance on her, for Concha, too, was gone among the stars.

CHAPTER XIV

On Lone Mesa's Top.

SONYA clung to the cockpit's edge with clutching fingers, her eyes, burned dry of sudden tears, fixed on the future, if future there was to be. The aching sorrow for the lovely Mexican girl who had loved Starr Stone sank deep in her heart, never to be quite eradicated.

The memory of all sane and ordered things was dim and far away—the ranch house that was home, the faces of Serge and Lila and the child.

And Rodney Blake! With a shock she remembered him.

He was a stranger to her. She could not recall his face with any clearness. There was only one face clear to her. The face of this man so miraculously snatched from death to life, this man who drove an airship through the midnight sky toward life and love and liberty.

Presently, watching tensely, she saw the great pale ribbon of the Rio Grande.

The Border!

The international line!

She held her breath as they passed above it, and let it out in a great sigh.

A little longer, and they would be safe.

Safe—and home.

Home!

What would it mean to her and to Starr Stone?

The stern face of her brother—Rod Blake who had so grimly promised that no people, no country, no man should ever take her from him—and Marston of New York, the man who came to find who sent the contraband from Mazatlan to the coast!

They had not cheated destiny after all. They were headed straight for this, and Starr Stone knew it! For that he would not leave her to save himself she knew full well.

Confronted with this new knowledge of disaster Sonya wet her dry lips, cast desperately about for something she might tell these three grim men, and found nothing.

And then, leaning her face across the cockpit's polished edge, she became conscious of something; felt something of a seventh sense. Exactly as a dog senses danger which he cannot see, so this girl of the wild land sensed new danger now. It was as if the hackles of her spirit rose.

What could it be?

She looked at the back of Starr Stone's head, its bronze hair whipping in the backwash of wind behind the low windshield, and wished she could see his face.

If she could have done so she would have seen it set like a mask, for long before she felt the presence of this unseen danger he had been conscious of it.

He knew that not far behind them, not so high above, another little ship droned steadily out of the south—that Nemesis incarnate was on their trail. He knew that in that ship there was, in all probability, a machine gun in the hands of El Diablo himself, who was an expert in its use. What the end would be, he did not know. Only that it would be an end. There was no doubt of that.

El Capitan would never in this world let him get away with what he had done, with the knowledge he had, with the stand he had taken to forswear him and all his works. He meant to kill him—to kill them both, if no other way was possible—to shoot them down, if they would not land.

And where could they land with any chance of safety?

Well, it was fate—as he had told poor Conchita.

And then Sonya looked up and back—and saw.

Saw the soft silver thing that followed like a pointed sword.

After all!

After all the monstrous anguish, the fear, the sorrow, and the hope!

Verily Starr Stone was paying for his sins, and she paid with him for that love which had redeemed him to manhood's high estate, which had made of her a fugitive, an outcast from her own, but which burned in her soul with indestructible beauty.

So be it, thought Sonya Savarin, so be it.

* * * * * * * *

Down in that dim world below, the last act of this drama of the sage land was preparing for enactment. Posse after posse, scouring the lone levels, had turned back toward the railroad and the town. Baffled, wondering, they sought new reinforcements, made more extensive preparations to search the canyons and the Bad Lands country. Only Serge Savarin, the two men with him, rode and would not give up. Two Fingers, Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so hunted patiently in ever widening circles that had covered all the face of the flat land.

In the quest of these three silent trailers there was more than a mere search for a lost white woman. There was the dim and gentle shadow of that legendary deity the Blue South Woman who "made her hogan" in the white girl's heart.

So the Navajos rode steadily, would ride until they found her, either living or dead, if she was anywhere in the wild land, and destiny came to meet them.

They had done with the sagebrush levels. Lone Mesa loomed before them. Silently save for the click of the climbing hoofs, they ascended, fantastic figures from a long dead past, the low moon red behind them.

And in the magnificent heavens Starr Stone, looking desperately down ahead, caught the dim outline of Lone Mesa's crown, its shining white stone level.

Here was a landing place. Here were walls against which a man might make a stand if he were armed, find shelter behind which if he were not, providing he could get the time to leave his plane and gain them.

And Sonya too saw and recognized Lone Mesa.

It was almost level with them—was so—the ship was leveling off—distance, height, had dropped away—they were skimming the mesa's surface—touching—bouncing on the uneven rock—were still.

Behind them that other was at the very edge—above them—passing over.

Starr Stone, with his arms about Sonya, dragging her over the side, cast one flashing glance ahead.

"Kismet!" he said with white lips. "They beat us after all! They're down between us and the pueblo!"

So they were, the rocking gray ship still a hundred feet beyond. And El Diablo, Manuel, deadly shapes of menace, were climbing out, coming toward them.

Calmly Sonya stood beside her man.

"Come back," she said, touching him, "toward the cliff. It is our only way."

With his arm around her Starr Stone turned, and, stumbling, hurrying, they crossed the space between them and that sheer lip where once, ages ago, it seemed, they had looked into each other's tragic faces and found their destiny.

"Darling," the man said softly, "hold to me—tight—don't be afraid."

Sonya Savarin laughed, a little low sound.

"Afraid?" she said, running. "With you?"

"Halt!" came the great voice of El Diablo. "Halt! Or I fire!"

There was yet a moonlit space for the running feet. Death might catch them before they leaped to meet it.

Crack! Crack! Crack!

The sharp barking of an automatic, not the machine gun.

Bullets whined about them, clipped into the rock beyond.

And Sonya Savarin looked up for the last time into the face which had filled her heart, her soul, to the exclusion of all else since that wild day in the spring here on this wind-swept height, when she had first beheld it.

The man looked down, slowed in his stride.

One moment more—a kiss, maybe, and this glorious adventure would be done forever—sealed like a deathless flame in the casket of eternity.

And then, high on the thin blue air there came a sound as old as the ruined walls behind, a sound to chill the blood, to shock the very soul. Clear and high and savage, primitive as life itself, the war cry of the Navajos. It pealed above the cracking gun, stopped the man and the woman like a hand upon their shoulders.

And out from the dusky shadows of the crumbling walls three shadows came like darting flames. In the very act of whirling to meet them El Capitan and his henchman were caught in their onslaught, went down beneath them.

Then, as Starr Stone ran toward them, as Sonya followed, tall Two Fingers rose with the dapper pilot held by the neck in his powerful hands. Behind him Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so, came struggling up with the great bulk of El Diablo fighting like a fiend between them.

"South Woman," said Two Fingers, "what have these two done to you and to your man?"

He spoke in Navajo, and Sonya answered, panting.

"They would kill us both—because we know too much about them—they are breakers of the law—outlaws across the Border. Me they stole three nights ago—my man they would hang in the sun to die the slow death—and me they would give to this one—and to their followers after."

Two Fingers looked at her with quiet eyes.

"It is good," he said, "that we come."

"Oh—good!" she cried.

For another moment the tall Indian looked at her.

Then he stooped and caught Manuel as one takes a child and raised him cross-wise above his head.

Two Fingers was a tall and powerful man, and he looked like some ancient god of his fathers as he strode toward the mesa's lip.

In one horrified second Sonya Savarin saw what he would do, and a scream escaped her, but Starr Stone turned her face.

And Two Fingers, walking steadily toward that sharp rim, paused on its edge and cast his shrieking burden far out to the empty space below.

Hard on his heels Hosteen Nez and Hosteen T'so, with El Diablo, fighting every inch, between them.

"Quince!" he cried as he passed. "Save me and all I own is yours!"

"Remember those who fed the vultures, senor," said Starr Stone, "whose bones dried in the sun. Remember the women!—the children starved! It is your fate."

"Save me—Quince—save—"

But the wind of his falling snatched the last word from his mouth.

And there was silence on the mesa's rim, five people standing still for one breathless moment.

And then three horsemen came up over the debouching lip of the ancient trail; while a fantastic form with long white hair on its shoulders was seen to emerge from some hidden cranny of the pueblo. Serge Savarin, Rodney Blake, and Mr. Marsten rode forward in astonished haste; the Servant of the Lord came up between them all.

"Sonya!" cried her brother. "Oh, my God! Where have you been? What's happened to you?"

But Rodney Blake sat silent, his narrowed eyes taking in the group before him: the haggard woman, the scarecrow man with his right arm around her, the Indians, and the mad old preacher of the Word.

And Sonya Savarin looked back, her mind racing for the words which she must say, the tale she must tell.

With guarded eyes she glanced around: at Two Fingers, at Hosteen Nez, at Hosteen T'so; these three who had cleared the world of danger for her, who had saved her and hers from death.

These three—whom no one must ever know had done what they had done.

"I," she said, wetting her dry lips again, "I have been in Mexico—kidnaped by two men who have—died. I escaped—I and Starr Stone here—in this plane, but they followed us across the Border to catch and kill us both. We landed here—but—they—mistook the—height. They—they—struck the edge, and—fell."

She looked bravely in the three men's eyes, her low voice clear and quiet, even though she could not help the little gaps between her lying words.

"Is it not so?" she asked of Two Fingers, turning.

"It is so," the Indian replied.

"And you, Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so? Have I not spoken truly?"

"Truly," these said quietly, nodding, their English limited.

"My heaven!" said Serge Savarin. "My heaven! But who is this man with you? It seems I ought to know. Where have I seen him?"

"You have never seen him," said Sonya swiftly, "and he is my own man. I've known him since the spring. I've meant to tell you, Rod, for months that you must let me go—that I can never marry you. I think I never knew what love could be before. Now I am irrevocably lost to you, my life set to this man's life. Forgive me."

Rodney Blake did not move, his hands clasped on his pommel.

"Sonya," he said, "I know this man. I saw him once—at that Indian's hogan. I felt a presage of this moment then. But that is neither here nor there. I do not release you. We're taking you home with us now—I'm taking you to New York as soon as possible. Away from this fantastic country you'll return to sanity, to your normal self, and shudder at this memory. Come along, Serge."

And he started forward, flung himself from his saddle.

Marston followed him; Serge Savarin hesitated.

But here for the first time Starr Stone spoke, moved from Sanya's side.

"Not quite," he said, "my friends."

And in his extended hand was that excellent automatic which El Capitan Diablo would never need again, trained on them both.

At that grim command Rodney Blake stopped in his tracks, the other behind him.

"You, Mr. Savarin, have a right to know that your sister is free as the wind to choose—her man and her life. If I am that man, I give you my word that she shall not regret her choice through me. If that life is with me, I give you my word again that it shall be all that I can make it with my heart's very blood. But she shall choose. Sonya—remember, you are free."

"Free!" the girl cried. "And I have already chosen! To the end of life I choose you, Starr Stone!"

Once more the other turned his head, put his free arm round her, smiled down with his wild blue eyes that were midnight dark by now.

Then "Padre," he said to the Servant of the Lord, "can you say the marriage service?"

"Surely, my son," the old man answered softly.

"Will you say it here and now, for her and for me?"

"Gladly. The young heart must have its mate while the world is new. All things lose their brightness, and youth is short at best."

The shabby, thin old figure moved forward with a strange dignity.

"Thy right hand, child," he said to Sonya, "and thine, son. No," shaking his silver locks, "not with that engine of destruction in it."

So Starr Stone changed the gun from his right hand to his left, but its blunt nose never wavered from its mark. He took Sanya's hand, and with his eyes fixed on the faces of the three men held at bay before him he began to answer the lovely questions of the ancient ritual.

"Wilt thou, Starr, take this woman, Sonya, to be thy lawful wife, to love, cherish, and protect," the tender words went on, "till death do you part?"

"I will," he said.

"And wilt thou, Sonya, take this man, Starr, to be thy lawful husband—to love, honor and obey . . ."

Sonya's clear "I will" sounded in the high silence like the tones of a distant bell.

Then Starr Stone bent and kissed her swiftly."

"The covenant," he whispered, "forever and forever."

"Forever," she repeated.

"Padre," said the man, "for this service I give you my deep thanks. Some day I'll give you gold. Gentlemen, I warn you, stay where you are. I'm leaving with my wife."

And backing away, Sonya in the circle of his arm again, he went step by step toward the plane.

Once in its shadow he lifted her to her seat, reached for the belt, drew the buckle.

Sonya clung about his neck, laughter in her throat, tears on her cheeks.

"Where?" she cried. "Oh, Starr, where?"

"To a new life," he said steadily, "to a new world—to the West."

"Wait," she said, "one minute while I leave the old."

She leaned out and called into the silver shadows where the three men stood.

"Serge, dear," she said clearly, "don't forget me—ever—and forgive me if you can. My love to you always, and to Lila and to Babs. Keep Darkness for me. Rod—dear Rod—forgive me too. Mr. Marston, if you're quick enough and smart enough, you may find that one who sends the contraband to your city—at the store in town. Good-by, Serge—some day I'll be coming back. Until then, God keep you."

She changed swiftly to Navajo.

"Two Fingers," she called, "Hosteen Nez, Hosteen T'so—my hand on my heart to you—my people—my friends. I shall not forget."

And presently there was the roar of the motor, the trembling beneath her as the little gray ship came to pulsing life, Starr Stone in the pilot's seat, the moving of the moonlit rock of the mesa's top, the turn, the surge, the gathering speed, the lift, the thrill of quiet as they lost contact and sailed away across the mesa's rim. Swiftly they rose, and the tall stars came down to meet them, glorying.

As they had faced together bravely death and danger and disaster, so now they faced together bravely life and all it held for that white flame of immortality which lights all mortal flesh, true love.

Scaly Leg

Scaly leg of chickens is most often found with older hens. This ailment, observe a writer in the Wisconsin Agriculturist, is caused by a tiny mite and can be checked by first washing the legs in warm soapy water, then dipping them for a few seconds in kerosene. Do not leave them in the kerosene too long as it is too harsh a treatment then. Sulphur ointment is another remedy which has proved helpful, according to statements by some poultrymen.

Fox Hated in North, Is Saved in South Ireland

The popular attitude toward the fox differs radically in northern and southern Ireland, says a Detroit Free Press and Chicago Tribune Dublin correspondent.

In the North the fox ranks as vermin, and may be shot or otherwise killed without hindrance. It is an act of virtue to destroy him.

In the South there is an unwritten law among the country people that foxes must be preserved.

In both North and South there is the common grievance against the fox that he is the deadly enemy of the poultry yards. Wherever a pair of foxes establish themselves and have a family, the adjoining farmhouses have to take special precautions against their depredations. They carry off all kinds of poultry and adopt most ingenious devices to get into the hen houses. Even young lambs are frequently the victims.

The different attitude of the people to the fox in the North and South is due to the fact that in the North fox hunting is virtually unknown, while in the South and midlands and in the West several days a week are devoted to this sport.

Members of the hunt recognize the sympathetic support of the farmers, and at the end of each hunting season money is raised among the members of the hunt to compensate for losses in the poultry yards.

Turquoise Regarded as Protection to Its Owner

In the East the turquoise is worn to insure physical well being to its wearer and as a protection against the evil thoughts of others. In Tibet, for instance, says a writer in the Kansas City Star, a popular charm is a small gold or silver box, incrusted with turquoise, and containing little scrolls marked with mystic characters, guaranteed to thwart the malevolent schemes of evil-doers. Here it is also believed that a turquoise will turn pale with ill-health or ill-fortune of its wearer, a belief that has persistently clung to the turquoise through the centuries.

In many popular beliefs as widespread as this there is usually some grain of truth, and it is possible that the turquoise, which is the least hard of any of the precious stones, is affected by the electricity of the human.

The ancients believed a turquoise of great value might be found at the end of the rainbow. Another belief, common among North American Indians, was that a turquoise attached to gun or bow would cause bullet or arrow to go straight to its mark. In time it became symbolical of straightness and fairness in all matters, and in the Seventeenth century nearly every gentleman in Europe wore a turquoise as indication of his high sense of honor.

Muzzle Velocity of Bullet

The muzzle velocity of the bullet of the American military rifle is 2,700 feet a second. If it could keep up that rate of speed it could travel 1,840 miles an hour. A certain modern sporting rifle fires a bullet with a muzzle velocity of 3,900 feet a second, which would be at the rate of 2,660 miles an hour. The muzzle velocity of the shells of the German long-range guns that bombarded Paris was 5,260 feet a second, a rate of 3,586 miles an hour.

Woodpeckers and Sapsuckers

One of our most numerous and conspicuous winter bird friends is the woodpecker, very noticeable in the woods when most of the other birds are gone and with the leaves no longer obscuring vision. Every farmer knows of the good woodpeckers do. Those that do harm are sapsuckers. Of the 23 species of woodpeckers of the United States only three are properly classified as sapsuckers. — Missouri Farmer.

What the Palate Craves

The palate is enslaved by custom and tradition, says a Michigan cook, in the Detroit News. South sea islanders, whose ancestors regarded every missionary as a potential article of diet, are unable to understand why Americans should eat sweetbreads and calves' brains. African negroes, who gobble up dried ants pressed into cakes, shrink in terror from the moldy and odorous types of cheeses prized by Europeans.

PAULINE ALLEGRI IS WED TO CLARENCE DUTRA SUNDAY

Miss Pauline Allegri became the bride of Clarence Dutra at a nuptial mass in St. Annes Catholic Church on Sunday morning, with Reverend Father Falvey officiating.

The bride was beautifully dressed in white satin and a veil. She carried a bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Angie Vargas, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. She wore a turquoise blue taffetta dress with hat and shoes in pink. She carried pink roses. George Vargas was best man.

After the ceremony, a lunch was served to 200 relatives and friends at the new home of the bride's parents on the creek road.

In the afternoon the young couple left for a honeymoon in San Diego. On their return, they will make their home on Castro street, in San Leandro where Dutra is employed at the pencil factory.

NEW HOME

Life of High-Pressure Guns

The life of a large, high-pressure gun at normal rate of firing is about 150 shots. However, after the gun has fired this number of shots it is comparatively simple and inexpensive to bore out the liner and insert a new one, thus fitting the gun again for service.

DRILL TEAM PLANS PARTICIPATION IN EVENTS

Following their participation in the Santa Clara Holy Ghost parade at Santa Clara, Sunday, and in the Township Fair July Fourth parade tomorrow, the Mission San Jose S. P. R. S. I. drill team, captained by Miss Hazel Mendoza, will set a record for continuous activity, it is said, with participation in some event booked for every Sunday in July and August.

Foremost in the list of dates is that of July 20 and 21, when Miss Mendoza will lead her well-trained charges in the huge Warm Springs I. D. E. S. Holy Ghost. After that, the Mission drill unit will travel to Santa Cruz, where they will be the only participants from Alameda county.

Members of the team, other than Miss Mendoza, are: Eva Rogers, Irma and Adeline Valz, Vivian Mendoza, Helen, Rose and Amelia Amaral, Irene Williams, Adeline Amaral, Mildred and Evelyn Santos, Elva Vargas, Marie Leal, Belmeda Silva, Margaret Brown and Maragaret Langford.

TOURISTS FLOCK TO NILES CANYON ON WEEK-ENDS

Parking problems at Stonybrook park Sunday, where more than 2000 members of the Bay Farm Vegetable Producers Association were gathered at a picnic, gave rise to several minor traffic jams in Niles canyon, before traffic officers untangled the melee.

Captain Louis Eieke, whose attention was called to traffic conditions in the canyon several weeks ago, had several men on duty to handle the Sunday traffic.

Niles canyon, made more beautiful than ever this year by the continuous stream of water in the creek, is attracting record crowds over the week-ends. Managers of picnic grounds are looking forward to their best season in many years.

CASEYS SWAMPED BY BERKELEY COUNCIL IN BALL GAME

Weakening after the sixth inning, the Centerville Knights of Columbus baseball team was defeated by the Berkeley council nine in a game played at the St. Mary's school diamond, at Berkeley, Sunday. The final score was 14 to ..

Holding the score to three-all up to the sixth frame, J. Duarte, Centerville pitcher, began to give way. He was nicked for five runs in a series of hits in the sixth.

The next game of the series, delayed because of vacation time, will be played on the Centerville diamond during the early part of August.

WARNS AGAINST BEING STAMPEDED OFF FARM LAND

(From Pacific Rural Press)

DON'T LET yourself be stampeded off your land by the supreme court decision on the Frazier-Lemke amendment.

It is true that the supreme court took away from you a club which could be used as a last resort—and seldom was used.

But the supreme court did not take away from you the services of the debt adjustment committees, or the county conciliators, and most of all it did not and could not take away from you the club of public sentiment. No one will want to unjustly rob you of your land if there are public witnesses to the robbery.

When a debt adjustment committee has suggested a fair settlement of its voluntary action, or when the conciliator has taken the case to court for you and suggested what he thinks is a fair settlement to the federal judge, the holder of the mortgage is risking the condemnation of public sentiment if he refuses and public sentiment fairly, justly, fearlessly used is the greatest force in this nation.

Conciliators of the southern district of this state held a conference at Los Angeles the other day and noted with alarm that "a number of large financial institutions are already beginning foreclosure proceedings."

Well, there is a means of halting that. if you feel that your mortgage holder is about to foreclose.

Have the conciliator file in federal court for you. That ties the property up while the conciliator is attempting to work out a fair settlement. It is customary for the court to grant a 90-day period in which negotiations can proceed, and if the conciliator asks for more time in which to try for a settlement, then the court may grant one or more extensions.

THREE INITIATED BY O. E. S. LAST WEDNESDAY

Meeting in the new hall for the first time since its complete renovation, the Orient Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, initiated three candidates last Wednesday night at a special session. Bernice Boyd, worthy matron, had charge of the initiatory rites.

The neophytes were Mr. and Mrs. Harold Houghton and Mrs. Amber Berlem, all of Niles.

POULTRY SHOW WILL HAVE 2500 BIRDS ON DISPLAY

The greatest poultry show ever held in the southern part of Alameda county,, will be a feature of the Washington Township Fair at Centerville this year.

Recognizing the value of Washington township as a poultry center, from which some of the highest bred birds in the industry come, the Lions Club, Fair sponsors, have arranged to have more than 2500 fowl on display. The exhibit, to occupy a large part of the main display tent, will be sponsored by the Western Fanciers' Club, the California Bantam association, the Northern California Poultry Club and the Hayward Chamber of Commerce. A. Sycher will have charge of the birds while on display.

In addition to the numerous breeds of chickens, there will be shown water fowl and turkeys.

F.E. BOOTH CANNERY STARTS APRICOT PACK HERE

The F. E. Booth cannery, at Centerville, after a short apricot run last week, to clean up early fruit opened this week for steady work on the yellow fruit.

The plant, which employs numerous local people, will continue to operate as the supply of fruit demands, according to Manager Bishop.

The Shuckl cannery at Niles, closed last year will not reopen this time, it was learned by a committee from the Niles Junior Chamber of Commerce, who interviewed Max E. Shuckl, owner of the plant recently. The buildings may be used as a storehouse later in the season, Shuckl stated.

LIONS "CUBS" WILL HAVE DRILL TEAM IN 4TH PARADE

Coached for two years by Jack De Luce, the Centerville Lions Cubs, organization of former and present Boy Scouts, will participate in the great parade tomorrow morning. The boys, who have mastered the intricacies of squad drill will make one of the most outstanding units in the line of march, according to Lions this week.

CORN THIEVES CART LOOT AWAY IN AUTOMOBILE

Growers throughout the south county region are warned by authorities this week, that thieves, apparently operating in an automobile, are stealing corn from fields.

Frank Serpa, Warm Springs grower, notified police that twenty sacks of corn were taken from his fields sometime over the week-end. Constable Tom Silva, who investigated, stated that the culprits evidently made away with the corn in a truck. The tracks seemed to indicate that the vehicle turned toward Santa Clara county.

BANK OF AMERICA STATEMENT SHOWS DEPOSIT INCREASE

Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association in its statement of condition as of June 29, 1935, shows total deposits of $993,651,000 and total resources of $1,113,896,000. Bank of America (California) the associated state bank, is not included in the published statement as heretofore.

MISS THELMA TROUT MARRIED TO D. B. FULLER

Among the later June weddings,, was that of Miss Thelma Trout, of Centerville, to Donald Blair Fuller, of Newark, at the Centerville Presbyterian church Sunday morning. June 23. The Rev. James M. McElhinney officiated.

The bride, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. K. Trout, and a popular member of the younger set, was attired in a white crepe afternoon dress and a wide picture hat. Her maid of honor, Miss Muriel Fournier, of Niles, wore a yellow ensemble and a corsage of gardenias. Best man was Jess Johnston, of Alvarado.

Both of the newlyweds are graduates of the Washington Union High school, at Centerville, where Fuller was counted as one of the outstanding athletes. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Fuller, of Newark.

The couple will make their home at Hayward, where Fuller is employed.

DECOTO JUNIORS TO GIVE EQUIPMENT TO SCOUTS

Through the courtesy of the Decoto Junior Chamber of Commerce which organization sponsored a carnival several weeks ago for their benefit, Washington township Boy Scout troops will receive articles of equipment.

Three troops have already submitted to the civic organization, lists of material needed. Rather than make outright cash gifts to the troops, which is against the scout rules, the Decoto group asked that each troop state what article it needed most.

MARRIAGE LICENSE

A marriage license was issued in Oakland this week to George R. Goularte, 23, of Alvarado, and Miss Emily M. Souza, of Hayward.

VALLEJO LODGE IN VISIT TO HOME SATURDAY

Solano lodge, 229, one of the three Masonic lodges at Vallejo, honored the Masonic Home at Decoto, with a visit Saturday afternoon, the trip calling for about 120 miles of travel. Most of the time was occupied with the working of the Master Mason degree in the temple, with Worshipful Master Harry Brown in charge. While the degree was being conferred, the ladies of the delegation staged a program of entertainment in the assembly hall for the pleasure of the women of the home.

Earlier in the week, the five lodges comprising the thirty-ninth district—Music of Livermore, Alisal of Pleasanton, Alameda of Centerville, Eden of San Leandro and Eucalyptus of Hayward—visited the home, presenting an entertainment in the evening. James Drummond, master of the San Leandro lodge, and president of the officer's club of the lodges named and under whose auspices the visit was made, presided. The entertainers were from the several lodges, with one number by home talent.

Thursday evening Alameda Chapter of the Order of DeMolay, Leon Wilkens, master councilor, conferred the first degree on a class of six candidates in the temple.

Wrens Most Fickle Birds

Wrens are the most fickle birds, avicets and grosbeaks probably the most loyal. Parent avicets take turns sitting on the eggs at 15-minute intervals, with almost clocklike regularity. The mother hummingbird, while hatching her brood, never allows her mate to approach her nest, and fights him off if he attempts to do so. The female magpie builds a large, round nest that has no visible opening, and then covers it completely with sharp thorns to thwart unwelcome visitors.—New York Times.

DRAMATIC TRAGEDIES
That's what Blow-outs are—"

GET THE TIRE WITH GOLDEN PLY BLOW-OUT PROTECTION—Today!

New Silvertowns Proved 3 Times Safer from High Speed Blow-Outs

• Here—in his own words—Bert Lytell tells how he found out how dangerous blow-outs can be. "I was driving to Minneapolis, doing about 60 miles an hour on a dirt road when that tire blew out. My car 'waltzed' around—swerved and finally came to rest on the brink of a ditch. If it had gone over, I'd still be in there . . . they could have covered me up . . . But no more of these close shaves for me! From now on I'm riding on Goodrich Safety Silvertowns."

Let us put a set of Goodrich Safety Silvertowns on your car. They are the only tires in the world with the Life-Saver Golden Ply—the amazing Goodrich invention that makes Silvertowns three times safer from high speed blowouts. Remember, Silvertowns cost no more than other standard tires. And they give you months more mileage at no extra cost.

NEW KIND OF TUBE RESISTS TEARING—LASTS LONGER

Engineers were amazed when Goodrich developed this remarkable new super-tough tube—You never need worry about tubes if you have Gold and Black Tubes—built to wear longer—resist tearing—take the worst possible punishment. And they cost no more than ordinary tubes.

MORE ON SECOND ANNUAL

elaborate of the week. Chairman Frank Madruga, of the parade committee, announces today that all is in readiness for the huge spectacle. The floats, bands, drum corps, marchers and horsemen will gather at the high school, march the length of Centerville's Main street to Thornton avenue, turn there, and counter march back to the school grounds.

Madruga, in a warning last week, tabooed the use of firecrackers during the parade. He stated that close watch will be kept and that violators will be seized.

Following the luncheon, to be served at the fair grounds, the day's program will begin with the the main address of the occasion by Judge Peter J. Crosby, prominent Oakland jurist, and a native of this district.

Swiss wrestling, the Southern Alameda County league championship baseball game, Japanese fencing and wrestling, a huge food sale and a series of races will take up the balance of the afternoon. A great fireworks display, at 8:15 p. m. will honor the holiday and the fair, after which another dance will be held in the high school gymnasium.

The "Friday Night Show," and the stock display, the latter to be held Saturday, will be attractions later in the week.

The complete program:

The Badminton Game

This game originated in India and was known as poona. It was played there for centuries without attracting much outside interest. In the 60s, English army officers took a fancy to it and in 1872, when some of them went home on furlough, they took equipment for the game with them. The formal introduction of poona to England was in 1873 in the home of the duke of Gloucestershire. The duke's castle was named Badminton and thus the game acquired its present name.

Like a Layer Cake

The harbor of Hongkong is one of the most beautiful in the world. As the city rises from the esplanade along the waterfront it assumes the appearance of a huge layer cake. The peak rises 1,800 feet above sea level. A train excursion leads to Canton, where nearly a third of the population live on boats. The walls of Hongkong are 20 feet thick and in some places 45 feet high.

The Ginkgo Tree

Although the Ginkgo tree is claimed as a native of China, because the first trees came to Europe and later to America in a roundabout way from that country, it has never been observed growing wild. Fossil remains of this tree have been found on more than one continent. Therefore it is assumed that it once occupied a wide range of territory.

Old Timothy Stand Needs Fertilizing

Early Attention Is Necessary If Satisfactory Results Are Obtained.

Prepared by Ohio State University Agricultural Extension Service. WNU Service.

It will pay to give the timothy sod some special attention this spring, in the opinion of agronomists at the Ohio State university, who are recommending a special top dressing with a nitrogenous fertilizer.

Because of the failure of many new seedlings last year, it is expected that many meadows that ordinarily would be plowed this spring will be keut for another year.

The agronomists say that additional hay may be secured from these meadows, when they are largely or entirely timothy, by top dressing the field early with 150 to 200 pounds of sulfate of ammonia or nitrate of soda. If calcium cyanamid is used, the application should have been much earlier.

Ohio experiments indicate that, with normal rainfall in early spring, such an application will raise the yield of timothy 1,500 or 2,000 pounds an acre.

Nitrogenous fertilizers, however, should not be applied alone for more than one or two years for, say the agronomists, a stand of hay cannot be maintained unless phosphates and potash are also supplied. A 10-6-4 or similar analysis fertilizer is recommended if these top dressings are continued into the third year.

Nitrogenous top dressing may be expected to increase timothy seed yield one to two bushels an acre, should farmers with sufficient forage desire to produce seed.

Demand for timothy seed may be expected to continue to exceed the supply for at least another year, according to the university specialists. Timothy seed production in 1933 was only half normal; in 1934 it was one-seventh normal. Since many seedings failed last year, production in 1935 will probably be less than normal.

Black Rot Canker Common

Black rot canker in some form is of common occurrence, says the Rural New Yorker. It may be seen in the fall in the black decay of apples. And in the spring and summer it shows as spots on the leaves, and all the year, unless cut out, it may manifest itself as rough growth on limbs, as cankerous eruptions on the branches. Canker on the limbs has been recognized for many years as an undesired growth; cut it out when doing the pruning work. This limb eruption can be connected with the black fruit and leaf spots, to show how one follows the other. All are due to a parasite called black rot canker, and known to orchard doctors as Physalospora cydoniae.

Use Tree Fruit for Hats

Native women in Oaxaca, in southern Mexico, use the hard, hollow woody fruit of a certain tree for hats. Mixtec and other Indian women of the region consider them "chic."

Famous Dancing Beetle Is Known as Whirligig

Among the 3,500 British beetles is the whirligig, famous for dancing its way through life, writes Marcus Woodward, the naturalist, in Pearson's Weekly. Though it can fly from pond to pond, it lives through most of the year on a pond's surface, and never thinks of moving without dancing. All the time whirligigs are alert for danger. Try to catch one; it sheers off as quick as light. Seriously alarmed, they dive, each carrying down between its legs a bubble of air on which it can subsist for a short while. This dive may clearly be seen, for the air bubble glitters like quicksilver. What sets the whirligigs whirligigging? A love-motive is naturally to be suspected. Each gay little male, in armor bright of steely blue, would impress his charms on a coy female by showing how he can outdance all rivals. There is method in the madness of the dance. The film on the surface of a pond's water holds many minute insects of the air, which have fallen into the pond and are too light to sink. On these the whirligigs prey. They dance for a living.

Principal Articles of Export Used as Barter

At the very earliest time of which there is record, and in remote places in later times, the principal article of export, by common consent and practice, was used as a third element or medium of exchange, says the Washington Star. Then anyone having articles of commerce for exchange would first exchange them for the article used as a medium of exchange and afterwards exchange the medium for the article desired. Almost every stable article of commerce has at one time or another been used as such medium of exchange; as cattle in ancient Greece, Rome, and other pastoral countries; iron in Rome and other ancient and some medieval countries and until recently in Japan; tobacco in the Colony of Virginia; wheat and other grains in many agricultural states; lead and tin at times; and copper, silver and gold almost universally from ancient time to the present day. Iron bars are still used in trading with the natives in central Africa.

MORE ON WATER DISTRICT

dam, many years ago. The release, in its present proportions will continue until November, it is said.

Ranchers west of the fault line, whose wells in past years were in danger of salt water infiltration, are pleased with the new installation. J. C. Shinn, a member of the water board, states that the water being carried by the new pipe is worth $1000 per day to ranchers of the Centerville section.

At the board meeting, the matter of prime importance was the adoption of the budget, the total of which, including redemption of bonds and interest, salaries of officials and maintenance costs, is $22,000. To meet this, the district found it necessary to increase the tax rate, according to Will D. Patterson, board president, from 18 to 25 cents, this to become affective with the first installment of taxes due in November.

Line of Least Resistance

The expression, "the line of least resistance," means the line or course of procedure toward any goal along which the resistance of any opposing element is minimal.

Another Gospel

Two leaves of Second century A. D. papyrus, acquired by the British museum, are said to be fragments of a gospel, dealing with the life of Christ.

MARSHALL GREEN TO LEAVE ON VOYAGE THIS WEEK

Marshall Green, son of Mrs. Fred Mitte, of Niles, will leave for New York this week, as deck yeoman on the United States Army Transport St. Mihiel. Green, who had been a member of the crew on the "Alaska colonization trip," and on a subsequent trip to the Hawaiian islands, will remain in the same post, handling orders from the bridge and keeping the log while entering and leaving port.

Green will be gone until next November. The ship will pick up Secretary of War Dern at New York, then said to Hawaii via the Panama Canal, thence back to New York, where she will dock for two weeks before a trip to Porto Rico. From Porto Rico the St. Mihiel will return to New York, then sail for San Francisco.

Green, who spent a short time at home here last week, showed motion pictures taken on both his Alaska and Hawaiian trips.

While in Hawaii, he met James and George Geib, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Geib, of Niles, who were with the Pacific fleet during its stay at Pearl harbor. Green said that he had visited with George Geib at the Pearl harbor navy hospital, where Geib is recovering from minor burns suffered while on duty. The burns were not serious, Green said, stating that Geib would soon be back in active service.

Edible Clams and Mussels

Fresh water forms are quite different from the edible clams and mussels from the sea, but they have been used at times for human food. Shell-mounds left in various parts of this country show that fresh-water mussels were common in the diet of the prehistoric people.

The Word Sarcophagus

The derivation of the word sarcophagus is from a Greek word which means flesh eater. The name originated in the alleged property of a certain limestone of consuming the whole body, except the teeth, within 40 days.

BALL GAME WILL BE FEATURE AT FAIR TOMORROW

Niles And Newark Clash In Contest At 2:45 At High School

A baseball game, in which the rivalry will be deadly, will be played at the Washington Union high school tomorrow, as part of the Township Fair program in the afternoon, it was learned from league officials this week. The teams to tangle are Newark, winner of the first half, and Niles, conceded the strongest team at the present time. The contest is scheduled for 2:45 p. m.

Meeting Tuesday night at Niles, managers of the Niles and Decoto teams decided that Sunday would be the day for the play-off of their tie in the lead of the second half. The game will be played at the Fair grounds at 2:30 p. m.

The outcome of the games Sunday, with Decoto and Niles winners, will leave the league in a three way tie with the two above teams and Newark, if the latter team beats Pleasanton Sunday. The Pleasanton-Newark game, scheduled for last Sunday at Newark, was postponed because of conflict with the St. John's celebration. If Newark wins, which is likely, the winner of the Niles-Decoto game will have to play Newark before the championship league three-game series.

In the games last Sunday, Niles beat Pleasanton, at Pleasanton, by a score of 20 to 4. Decoto, after borrowing a player from Alvarado, beat the latter team, when the borrowed man walloped a triple in the ninth. The score was tied five-all up to that frame.

A winter league, to be carried on by the same officials and teams, is seen, following word that all concerned are pleased with the outcome of the present league schedule.
